

Co-working Space

Creating fertile Working space together

<https://pixabay.com/en/person-woman-india-fields-plantage-690245/>

“Work on your own, NOT alone”

Tags: Economy;
Business, Working patterns

Challenge:

When we try to work at home it is easy to get distracted: The windows need to be cleaned, the food cooked or eaten - there is always something else to do. Or you tend to sit in front of your laptop from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. without any break, forgetting about food, movement, rest, joy, jokes, pleasure. Working alone can be really hard. Likewise you sometimes need some advice from a person with other expertise and you end up getting stuck because you can't find, can't reach or don't know the right person.

Solution:

To “start doing” what you want it is much easier when it is done together. Get a room, some chairs and a diverse group of people and you can create a co-working space. This means creating settings where there is no “new input” or “stuff to be done”, but a creative space where people can do what they need or want to do for their own project. This is what we call “Co-working Space. It can be a fixed space with table, chairs, meeting rooms and all that is required in an office structure. You can also create a temporary , or “pop-up co-working space. In these ways you can create co-working atmospheres easily just by giving space for the work to be done. It is similar to a permanent Open Space where everybody can do what they want.

References:

7 tips for creating your coworking space: <http://www.entrepreneur.com/article/240002>

Submitted by : Pioneers of Change