

Interactive Dinner

Creating connection in a deep and funny way while having good food

"I think that food ties us to our community and our traditions, and it's the thing that makes us feel good and connected." Kathy Freston

Tags Social: Building Community and Embracing Diversity

Challenge: Breaking the ice between people is a core ingredient of learning and co-creating. This can often take a lot of time and listening properly can also take a lot of energy. It can be difficult for different people from different backgrounds to stay attentive and to find a real connection.

Solution:

Creating an interactive dinner can be a lot of fun and helps people/participants to get into a deeper and more unusual place with each other but in a scenario we are all comfortable with. Who doesn't enjoy eating? We can learn a lot about each other on a personal level but also on a thematical issue - depending on the questions and tasks you give them.

The game can be changed in many different ways - use your creativity and adapt to your purpose, situation and size of group. Here we describe a welcome dinner with three courses and a group of about 16 people.

Submitted by : Pioneers of Change